Hardiness and immunity: a study in rheumatoid arthritis. To investigate the relationship between immune and psychosocial factors in a group of patients with rheumatoid arthritis. In a sample of 95 rheumatoid arthritis patients, data were collected about functional disability, coping strategies, illness perception and severity of disease. Data about general health and social resources were collected by a questionnaire. On the same day as the administration of questionnaires, TNF alpha and IL-6 were determined in serum. Multiple regression analysis revealed that the most important determinants of functional disability are TNF alpha, severity of disease and depression. Hardiness scores predicted TNF alpha and IL-6, but not disability. The results suggest that psychosocial factors may be important for the prognosis of rheumatoid arthritis.
